For me, an inclusive workplace is...

- Where people's identities are respected, acknowledged, and welcomed.
- That accepts and supports different cultural expressions.
- That encourages people to share their diversity of experiences and voices.
- Welcomes different ways of thinking, different kind of ideas and perspectives informed by different worldviews and values.
- Encourages the contributions of everyone regardless of their identities to contribute their ideas and solutions to move forward the workplace.
- That recognizes that inclusion is co-created and therefore, consider everyone's ideas, input, and suggestions when it comes to how to create inclusion and belonging for everyone.
- That encourages and promotes inclusive language and respectful communication.
- Where people see themselves represented in all levels of management and staff.
